Incorporated in 2006, Jump Studios specializes in design, animation, editorial, visual effects and original creative. With over 50 years of combined broadcast experience, partners Jeff August and Brian Vos have received multiple Emmy, BDA, regional and local industry honors for their work.

Challenge

Working with design partners all over the world, Jump Studios lacked a simple way to collaborate with its remote teams. Designers based in different cities often worked on the same project, so Jump Studios needed a solution that would make it easy for these designers to work together. Additionally, Jump Studios wanted to send project drafts to clients and receive feedback in a format that was easy for everyone to understand, regardless of technical ability. “We wanted a simple interface with good upload and download capabilities,” explained Brian Vos, Partner and General Manager of Jump Studios. “The ease-of-use needed to be almost transparent.”

Solution

When one of the partners at Jump Studios came across Box.net, the company decided to try it out. “When we first experimented with Box, we knew immediately that it was the right solution for both our creative workflow as well as our clients,” Brian recalled. Founded in 2005 with the mission to help people access their information easily from any location, Box.net has over 2 million users from thousands of businesses that look to Box to replace FTP software, simplify file management, and accelerate team productivity.

Brian found the implementation process to be extremely simple. “It was like spreading butter,” he explained. “We knew that if it was simple for us, it’d be simple for our clients.”

Jump Studios now uses Box on a daily basis to share and collaborate on design and video projects of all types. The creative team takes advantage of Box’s version tracking capabilities to ensure that all collaborators are working off the most recent version of a file. If changes are made and the team or client doesn’t approve, it’s easy to revert back to a previous version.

When the team finalizes a project, Box makes it easy to share with clients as well. Instead of dealing with a complicated FTP server, the account manager simply sends a link to the file or invites the client to view the contents of a folder. “Box has become an extension of us. It’s part of our system and how we communicate and work together. It’s like a seamless appendage,” Brian described.

The team at Jump Studios also appreciates Box's reliability and steadfast performance. "It's performed to our expectations and more," Brian explained. "There are no restrictions from Box that slow down our workflow...regardless of firewalls and all those other issues that corporate clients' experience, everyone we work with always gets onto the Box site."

Brian added, "Box is like that faithful and dependable partner - always there with never a technical issue."
